Commentary

The Russell Midcap® Index returned 4.3% in January. Investors entered January focused on the strength of the US economy and its inflationary implications, following a strong jobs report. December's nonfarm payrolls surged by 256,000, far surpassing the expected 165,000. This, combined with uncertainty over potential inflationary policies from the incoming administration, heightened market concerns. However, markets found relief when inflation data came in softer than feared. Core inflation increased just 0.2% from November and 3.2% year-over-year, signaling a more controlled price environment. In response, the Federal Reserve maintained its federal funds target rate at 4.25%–4.50%.

Our portfolio outperformed the Russell Midcap® Growth Index in January. Among our top contributors were Spotify and Atlassian. Spotify is a leading global audio streaming franchise with over 600 million monthly active users. We believe its position in the supply chain is solid given a secular trend of fragmentation in the music industry as well as internal product and pricing initiatives. Share momentum continued in January after a series of strong earnings results throughout 2024. Importantly, the company's profit margin is expanding nicely, and we believe it can rise further due to likely price increases, potentially better terms with labels and further cost discipline.

Atlassian provides collaboration and productivity software tools—a large, structurally growing addressable market that is expanding from the core software developer market to a much larger “knowledge worker” market. Along with much of the software industry, the company went through a period of weakness as small and medium-sized businesses pulled back spending due to macroeconomic concerns, and enterprise IT spending shifted toward artificial intelligence (AI) projects at the expense of traditional cloud software offerings. However, shares rallied after earnings results beat expectations and showed signs of a turnaround, including higher-than-expected cloud revenue growth and paid seat expansion.

Among our top detractors were Deckers and Ascendis. Deckers owns and operates the Ugg and Hoka brands, which comprise most of the company's sales. After a period of strong performance, shares experienced weakness after releasing its earnings results. While results demonstrated strong demand for both brands, a weaker-than-expected forward short-term outlook raised concerns. However, we believe the weakness can largely be attributed to supply shortages and management's conservative approach. We continue to view this as an attractive profit cycle driven by a combination of wholesale (market share gains within specialty running, disciplined door expansion in the US and new country launches), online (as brand awareness builds) and product innovation (a mix of performance and lifestyle, which expands the addressable market).

Ascendis is a biotechnology company leveraging a proprietary technology platform to drive the development of multiple leading therapies. Share weakness has continued since its Q3 earnings reflecting underwhelming sales of its first approved drug, Skytrofa—targeted at pediatric growth hormone deficiency. However, we remain confident in the potential of its second drug, TransCon PTH, for hyperparathyroidism. We believe TransCon PTH will serve as a significant catalyst for the company's profit cycle, given the substantial addressable market and our expectation that physicians will adopt the drug for a considerable portion of their patients.

Carefully consider the Fund's investment objective, risks and charges and expenses. This and other important information is contained in the Fund's prospectus and summary prospectus, which can be obtained by calling 800.344.1770. Read carefully before investing.

Current and future portfolio holdings are subject to risk. The value of portfolio securities selected by the investment team may rise or fall in response to company, market, economic, political, regulatory or other news, at times greater than the market or benchmark index. A portfolio's environmental, social and governance ("ESG") considerations may limit the investment opportunities available and, as a result, the portfolio may forgo certain investment opportunities and underperform portfolios that do not consider ESG factors. International investments involve special risks, including currency fluctuation, lower liquidity, different accounting methods and economic and political systems, and higher transaction costs. These risks typically are greater in emerging and less developed markets, including frontier markets. Securities of small- and medium-sized companies tend to have a shorter history of operations, be more volatile and less liquid and may have underperformed securities of large companies during some periods. Growth securities may underperform other asset types during a given period.

Russell Midcap[®] Growth Index measures the performance of US mid-cap companies with higher price/book ratios and forecasted growth values. Our capital allocation process is designed to build position size according to our conviction. Portfolio holdings develop through three stages: GardenSM, CropSM and HarvestSM. GardenSM investments are situations where we believe we are right, but there is not clear evidence that the profit cycle has taken hold, so positions are small. CropSM investments are holdings where we have gained conviction in the company's profit cycle, so positions are larger. HarvestSM investments are holdings that have exceeded our estimate of intrinsic value or holdings where there is a deceleration in the company's profit cycle. HarvestSM investments are generally being reduced or sold from the portfolios.
